2020 SIRE CATALOG

WELCOME

Every January serves as a point in time to reflect on the prior year and look forward to the next. Some of us celebrate the achievements of the year past, while some of us focus on new goals for the coming year. Never the less, January is a time to gain perspective. As I was reflecting this January, I felt a sense of pride to see how many young breeders in our industry achieved success in 2019. Turning to the new year and looking at the selection in the 2020 catalog, I can only imagine how far programs can move ahead this year. Compliments to everyone making their sire genetics so readily available in the 2020 sire catalog, you are working to develop the greatest industry in the US, our youth.

RSG GENETICS

QUALITY CONTROL

MINIMUM FROZEN THAWED STANDARDS

Semen meeting these standards or greater is acceptable for use in LAI or ET programs.
Semen below these standards will be discarded at the time of collection.

CONCENTRATION

The minimum number of progressively motile sperm cells per breeding dose is 30 million.
RSG frozen semen straws will be packaged at a minimum of 60 million total sperm cells per straw.

PERCENTAGE MOTILE

The number of motile cells in relation to the total number of sperm cells in the straw or sample being evaluated. Based on a 60 million concentration, then 50% PMS would be the cut off.

FORWARD PROGRESSION AND SPEED

Sperm cell moving in a forward linear direction at a minimum velocity of at least two cell lengths per second.

MORPHOLOGY

Defined as the form of the living organism. In general terms the sperm cell is made up of the Head, Midpiece and Tail. RSG standards will pass if less than 15% of the sperm cells are abnormal, however, we strive to have less than 10%.

GENDER SORTED SEMEN

This technology takes a raw ejaculate from a ram and separates the natural distribution of 50/50 male/female sperm cells into individual subpopulations of X Bearing and Y Bearing sperm. The dam (XX) will always contribute one of her two X chromosomes to her offspring. The sire (XY) however, will donate either a Y chromosome or an X chromosome, resulting in the offspring being male or female respectively.

The gender sorting machine was designed to separate the semen into individual subpopulations of cells containing either X chromosome-bearing cells (female) or Y chromosome-bearing cells (male) based on the size difference between the two chromosomes. Since the X chromosome is larger and contain slightly more genetic material than do Y chromosomes, they can be differentiated based on intensity of signals when the laser illuminates them.

The process involves putting semen into a media that contains a viable fluorescent dye that is attracted to genetic material. The more genetic material a cell contains, the more dye it absorbs. X chromosome-bearing cells absorb more dye than do Y chromosome-bearing cells. The semen is then run through a flow cytometer where the sperm pass single file in front of a laser. The laser illuminates each cell and, because of the viable dye, causes them to fluoresce. The amount of fluorescence determines whether the cell is carrying an X or Y chromosome.

The sorting machine's fluidic jet produces between 60-70,000 droplets per second and applies a slight electric charge to each droplet containing the desired sperm cell, based on the chromosome it is carrying.

As the cells exit the machine, they pass between two differently charged field plates. The charge on the droplets that contain the sperm of interest reacts to these differently charged plates, one negative, one positive, which directs the droplets into the gender-appropriate vials.

This sorting technology allows for immediate fresh use or frozen for future use. Using gender-sorted semen will give producers the opportunity to ensure 90 percent, on average, of their lambs being born in a specific window will be the gender they are hoping to achieve.

PLATINUM SIRES
